

— 5 YEARS OF WHOI STUDIES AFTER —

FUKUSHIMA

Citizen Science

OurRadioactiveOcean.org

Citizens from communities, schools, and businesses help raise the money it takes to analyze 20 liters (about 5 gallons) of seawater that they collect themselves and send to WHOI for signs of Fukushima contaminants.

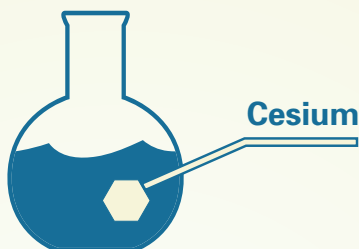

450,000
web visits

~250
samples

440 individuals
10 organizations

Science by the numbers

Cesium

908 number of seawater samples tested for radioactive cesium at WHOI since 3/11/11

9

number of cruises conducted by WHOI scientists to study Fukushima

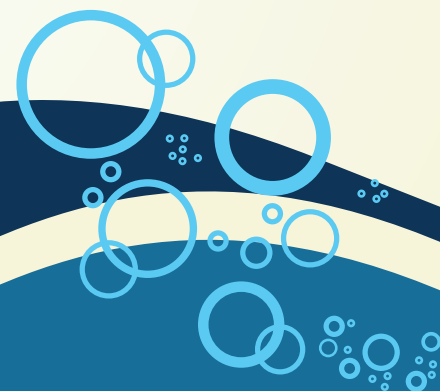

19

peer-reviewed publications on Fukushima by members of the Buessler-led team at WHOI

4 non-reviewed publications 7 outreach articles

50 co-authors from 23 institutions (US, Japan & Europe)

Did you know?

Buessler's Lab at WHOI has processed over 40,000

pounds of water looking for Fukushima contaminants

